DRAMATIC SKETCHES .- NO. 7.

THE SUPE. "Supe!"....Magic sound. It brings it all back, -all the delight and wonder of the play-house in those early times when even the supe got a share of the glory. The supe has been chaffed from time immemorial, but always playfully, and it would be hard to find a retired theatre-goer who does not read or hear the old name without a comical, mouraful interest. The supe is the man who never speaks from the stage, except in company with other men. Speaking by the card, there is no such thing as a supe. "Trained corps of supernumeraries" there are, but a single super is like an individual atom-his only value is in conjunction with other atoms. Behind the scenes these atoms are technically termed "shouters." They make the mobs,-the patriots who raise or knock the pins from under a dynasty by combined yet simple expression. And they know about as much as mobs do generally We have heard Mr. Murdoch tell of a choice lot of patriots which he was leading in some piece or other, who had with infinite care been drilled to make certain exciamations in a set order. But brains to adapt themselves to a situation they had not. Murdoch made an inadvertent transposition of his own lines, and the following short but emphatic dialogue was the re-

Hero-Would ye be slaves? Shouters-We would! we would! Hero (finding it too late to cry back, and trusting to luck)-Would you be free men?

Shouters-We'd die first! Such is the supe.

Who is there who has not found an army in a second-class theatre more entertaining than the funniest farce? The wonder has always been how it was possible to turn out such a set of scarecrows, and how with such an lucubus ever upon it the illusion could be at all sustained. If audiences were themselves better informed, the spectacle presented by the supers would be even more ludicrous to them than it is. The dresses are worn with very little alteration in numbers of pieces differing widely in time and place. The Scotch dress is so distinctive that the average sight-seer grasps its peculiarities with little trouble, and so of a few others: but very often the auditor knows very little more of what is the proper thing for the master in hand than the super himself.

Where does the supe come from? What is the inducement for him to make a zany of himself? Hard questions. Sometimes, certainly, he is ambitious to become an actor, and knows no other way than to begin in the very humblest capacity. And while here it may be said that some distinguished players have in fact risen from this insignificant place into enviable positions. John R. Scott always boasted that he did. William Goodall, who made such a sensation at Barnum's Museum years ago in the Drunkard, was a super only a few months before he made his great hit. Not only such cases, however, but the se who even graduate into the ranks of the "utility," are extravagantly exceptional. The matter is a riddle from this point of view. In the cases of ninety-nine out of a hundred there is not only no ambition, but there is, further, an ignorance of everything relating in any possible way to the drama, and an utter indifference to acquiring any knowledge on the subject.

Regarding the inducement we are still more in the dark. What inducement, put concretely and on a scale generally adopted by the theatres of the United States, is twenty-five cents a night, or a dollar and a half a week! For this munificent sum the supe submits to an emount of discomfort and bullying that would be dear at forty-nine dollars a month. He cannot be said to be driven into a theatre as into a gold mine. Even his dollar and a half he does not pocket free of duty, as we shall presently explain. Not ambitious (of too low an order, as a rule, to know what ampition is) and decidedly not enriched by his diluted share of professional life, how and why the supe exists must remain one of the unsolved problems. Actors have tried to answer it from the beginning, but always without success.

A somewhat important person in a dramatic company is an individual with the semi official title of "Captain of the Supers." He is usually an actor in a small way, but his captaincy is not determined by his abilities in this regard, but by his powers of command. He has the roughest sort of material to deal with, and it is necessary he should be a person with energy and firmness. It is his business to drill the supes in their evening's work, to get the required dresses from the wardrobe and to see that they are safely returned, and to look after his uncouth forces while on the stage and off it. In furtherance of this latter duty he has in the first place to see that they do what they should (as nearly as it is in their nature to), and in the second, that they do not do what they would if they were not closely looked after. In the better theatres there is a room especially devoted to the supes, to which a standing order remands them whenever they are not needed on the stage. In default of such provision the stage. during the performance of a heavy piece, is apt to be in a state of tumult and confusion. The supes, of course, do not attend rehearsals. Their revenues from the theatre do not permit them to rely upon such incomes exclusively for support, and they have, or are supposed to have, other business in the daytime. The captain rehearses for them. The stage manager or prompter tells him, as the place proceeds, how many men he wants on scenes specified, and what they are to do. These directions be details to his force at night, rehearsing them on the stage between acts in the important movements. The captain doesn't get much credit from the public for his work, and as he must make it up somehow, he takes it out of the supe. That forlorn creature, by his articles of engagement, agrees to pay the captain for his services certain amount a week, sometimes a night's wages, sometimes more or less. The management sanctions this, as it is found to be about the best way of running the department. The captain is in addition paid the salary of "responsible utility"-about $15 a week-and it often happens during a tragedy season, when an extra force of supernumeraries is required, that he makes as much money as the principal actors. Sometimes the humble supe's position has been assumed by youngsters on a lark, or desirous of investigating the hidden recesses of the theatre. A few years ago this was done on East in a rather extraordinary manner. No less distinguished persons than a party of Harvard students made application to the Boston Theatre, and were employed by the captain with ravening eagerness. Never since the keel of the "Boston" was laid had such fine figures of men offered themselves for these elevated posts. Cambridge is within easy distance of the city, and the was kept up until some of the college authorities, happening to visit the theatre, discovered our young adventurers despite their elaborate disguises, and suppressed their notions of practical humor in a summary manner. The captain did not know until the finale occurred that he had been entertaining angels

Lowly hung as the super is in the dramatic gallery, there are recognized grades of excellence even in his poor sphere. At the bottom of the ladder we find the supe engaged in very simple duties. To roll under a green baize carpet, simulating the raging of the angry main, is a favorite commencement of his apprenticeship. His graduation thence is laborious and slow. Half-way up, perhaps, stands the spear business. When a man can carry a spear there is a tolerable confidence reposed in him. Finally, if he has talent, he is permitted to carry a banner. This is the crown of a supe's career. To keep the S. P. Q. R side turned to the audience, to raise and depress it at the right time and to hold it gracefully when at rest,-there is nothing beyond this; what should there be? But the real glory of the supe seems to have departed. The simple tastes of this generation are too much for him. What chance has the supe of other days in Birth, and Caste, and School, and all that sickly crew? Ours gave him, in its military procession, a splendid opportunity, but one swallow do a not make a summer. The supe thinks the present generation is weak-kneed and broken-backed in its dramatic tartes. Booth is the only man who acts the old-fashioned tragedy now-a-days, and he can't keep the whole supernumerary profession in en- | acted.

gagements. The younger tragedians, Adams, Barrett, and the like, play only their ridiculous sentimental pieces, wherein the genuine supe has positively no chance to disport. The Irish drama has gone to the dogs, too, Barney is in Ireland, and nobody knows when he will come back. Burlesque and sensation give the girls a fine chance, but sink the supe lower than ever. Richard III or Macbeth is his idea of a dramatic entertainment. Put him into dirty white tights that show his bow legs in all their native elegance, drape round him a toga that makes him look like a suicidal butcher, and bind with the consul's or senator's wreath his lanky soap locks. and the Supe, as he always was and will be, stands confessed. But put him in store clothes and you ruin him. Tragedy is his forte; "pantaloon" pieces are his undoing.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

The City Amusements. AT THE MENNERCHOR GARDEN, northeast corner of Coates and Franklin streets, the first of the series of grand instrumental concerts, order the direction of Mr. Carl Sentz, will be g. on this evening. The programme for the occa. on will be as follows:— PART L.

Finale. From this date a concert will be given every evening until September 8, and the Miennerchor Garden will undoubtedly become a most popular place of resort during the warm nights of summer. The musical selections will be of a high grade of excellence, and the efforts of the managers will be directed to making the entertainments as enjoyable as possible. In order to prevent the intrusion of undesirable characters, only season tickets or single tickets in packages will be sold. The price of season tickets will be $5, and of packages containing four

CITY ITEMS.

SOMETHING PRACTICAL .- If you will drink, why not drink the best liquors? After all the talk about adulterated liquors there, are places yet in Philadelphia where a pure article is sold, and the beautifully fitted up seloon of I. T. Sharp, at No. 29 South Eleventh street, is one of them. Here, of all other places, can a thirsting and perspiring public find relief. Mr. Sharb will serve you up, in a way that is perfectly irresistible, the charming sherry cobblerthe delicious mint julep, and the cool and refreshing emonade. If you ask for a glass of good brandy for the stomach's sake, You will get it. Do you wish a glass of delicate flavored wine? that also will be served. Name anything in the drinking line and you will be accommodated. The attendants are courteous; you drink before marble-top counters, cut-glass tumblers, beautiful mirrors; and to these surroundings alone is the value of a drink heightened Mr. Sharp also has on hand a fine lot of excellent cigars. Call upon him and see if we exag-

AT THE SEA-SIDE .- The Columbia House at Cape May, New Jersey, opened on the 22d of June, and again by George J. Bolton, who is also the proprietor of Bolton's Hotel of Harrisburg, and the Washington, on Chesnut street, Philadelphia,

It is well known that this established and popular house has the finest shade and the best bathing beach to be found at Cape May.

The music, employes, and every appointment of the establishment will be selected and arranged with more than usual care this season.

There are several fine cottages connected with the Columbia, with excellent rooms and ocean views. Also good stabling and carriage houses. The long experience which Mr. Bolton has had in the hotel business and his many successful seasons at the capes warrant us in recommending the Columbia to the readers of the TELEGRAPH.

CAS FIXTURES.

I INITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, FAVETTE STREET, NEAR CHARLES, THIRD STORY UNION BANK BUILDING,

PROPOSALS are invited for additional dredge in the chapnels below Fort Carroll, leading to this city, as follows:—
In the channel known as the Brewerton Channel, 100,000 cubic yards.
In the channel known as the Craighill Channel, 60,000 cubic yards.

60,000 cubic yards.

Bids to be separate for each channel. Bids for half the above amounts, or for quantities not less than 10,000 yards, will be considered. The work need not be entirely completed in 1871, but may run over into 1879. The tide rises about one foot and one half. Length of haul of material averages about two miles. Proposals will state kind of machinery to be used; average quantity of cubic yards to be removed daily; price per cubic yard, including excavation, removal, and deposit. Material to be measured in dumping scows.

Proposals to be scaled and in duplicate, endorse 1 on outside, accompanied by a copy of this advertisment, will be received until noon of the sist day of July, 1811, and will be opened in five minutes. after, in presence of such bidders as may wish to be present.

The right to reject any bid is reserved.

Forms of proposal and any desired information to be had on suplication at this office.
